

A Collection of all the known
South Australian Hotel Beer Labels
V2.1

Introduction

This book is a reference to all the known South Australian Hotel Beer Labels produced by or for hotels in SA. Bottled beer has always been very popular in SA with some breweries including Coopers not selling any draught beer at all until the 1980s. There was even a large trade in bottling companies that purchased cask beer from breweries, which they bottled and sold under their own name. However, by the beginning of the twentieth century this had all changed with most of the breweries in the state either had closed or had amalgamated. The main breweries, The South Australian Brewing Company and the Walkerville Co-Operative Brewing Company had been selling bottled beer in vast quantities without any shortages.

World War One had had a large impact in brewing as a large amount of our produce including grains went into the war effort, and this left beer shortages. Bottled beer was being rationed and there was also a shortage in draught beer, so the authorities introduced 6 o'clock closing at all licensed premises in 1915.

The shortage of bottled beer and bars closing early left a large hole in the market that the publicans quickly filled. The hotels would buy in large one quart (around one litre) or flagon bottles and fill them with draught beer for patrons to take home at closing time. This was wildly popular and quickly adopted in all the hotels in the state. The practice became so large that the hotels could not keep up and had to employ several workers to bottle beer on a permanent basis.

By the 1940's bottled draught beer was so popular that two bottling companies were formed to contract out the bottling from the hotels. The bottling company would go to the hotel and pick up kegs of beer and any empty returned bottles. They would then clean the bottles, fill them with that hotels beer, label them and then return the bottles to the hotel. It was illegal for the bottling company to buy beer from the breweries so it was important that only that hotels kegged beer be used to fill their bottles.

Bottled draught beer was fine if it was consumed within days of it being bottled but without the cleanliness of the professional bottling plants that the breweries possessed, the beer would spoil. Moreover, in 1950 with the South Australian Brewing Company being the main supplier of draught beer into South Australian hotels, and their bottled beer trade being damaged by spoilt hotel bottled beer; they put a halt to the practice. The hotels were threatened to stop bottling beer or there beer supply would be stopped, effectively closing the hotel.

So over the 30 years hotels bottled beer, they produced a label for each hotel, as well as any change in ownership, change in hotel name and change in labelling regulations. Making for a huge amount of different labels being produced. This book is documenting all the known hotels labels, and contains over 500 different labels. Nevertheless, it would only cover less than 50% of labels made, as some hotels would bottle small amounts particularly small country hotels, and some owners would only own the hotel for several months or years.

The South Australian Brewing Company revived the idea of bottled draught beer in the 1960's with the introduction of West End Draught. This time the beer would be bottled by the brewery and has now become the largest selling beer for SA Brewing.

The earliest hotels labels date from just after World War one, with entrepreneuring hotel managers getting around the 6 o'clock closing by selling take home beer. After the 'Six O'clock Swill' patrons had to buy bottled beer if they wished to continue drinking at home, and with the lack of bottle shops this was the only way to purchase bottled beer after 6 O'clock. Bottling Draught beer grew until pretty much every hotel in South Australia was doing it by the start of World War Two.

Hotel bottled beer was mostly unregulated until the 1940's when the department for Customs started to crack down on the labelling of the beer. All beer not bottled by a brewery must display the business and owners name clearly on the label, to which many of the hotels did not comply. The 1940's saw many changes to the hotel beer labels with the hotels owners name being added.

By the end of the 1940's hotel bottled beer was such a large business two new companies were formed to contract the bottling of beer for hotels. A.C. Bottling Company in Hindley Street was created by Mr A Cheeseman and operated out the back of the Kalgoorlie Hotel, And Port Bottling Company from Addison road, Cheltenham. Combined they looked after around 40 hotels.

In 1949 the regulations for labelling changed, the hotels now had to display who bottled the beer if they were not bottling it themselves. Therefore, the bottling companies used a rubber stamp to put their details on the beer labels, which was quickly rejected by customs, so in March 1949 the bottling companies put their own label below the main hotel label to say that the beer was bottled off-site. Eventually the hotels added who bottled the beer on the main label. So this makes a very accurate way of dating some labels, if they label has a stamped bottled by mark it must date between late 1948 and March 1949 and labels with the bottling company added would date from March 1949 to March 1950 when hotel bottled beer ceased.

Hotel Label Numbering

This book contains a different identifying number for each of the labels represented. The numbers are organised into several sections

5 . H 000 . 0000

The first number is the post code prefix for the state, so in South Australia it is 5.

The second is an identifier that the label is a Hotel Label.

The next three numbers is the identifier of the hotel that has sold the beer. These numbers come from Bob Hoads book on South Australian hotels. I have sequentially assigned numbers to the hotel as they are listed in Bob's book. Any venues that are not included in the book have been added to the end of the sequential numbering system, these include Clubs and resorts that were not specifically hotels.

The last number is the label number for that hotel, I have moved in lots of 10. If I find a label that is older than the 0010 label I will insert it as 0005. This will leave some room for future expansion.

I also have other label documents that use a similar numbering for labels.

5.000.000.0000

Again 5 for the post code prefix, the next digits are delegated for the brewery, breweries are assigned in alphabetical order. The next three digits are for the brand of beer and last four digits are for the label number.

I also use the following letters to help identify the type of label.

N for Neck Labels

Eg 5.123.001.ON10

S for Special Labels (For an event and not for general release)

Eg 5.123.001.OS10

Lastly as the age of the labels in this book are now 70+ years old, the original condition of most of the labels included, were in very bad condition. Most labels images have been digitally touched up, though some were completely digitally redrawn, or the only existing image is a B&W photocopy. The redrawn labels are indicated with the following symbols after the label code.

Δ A Black and White copy of the original label, colours unknown.

† Digitally redrawn label from a partially recovered label, colours and design might vary slightly.
